WEEKLY SUPPORT GROUPS

Connection for People with Cancer

SUPPORT GROUPS

A support group can be an important complement to cancer treatment and recovery. CSCP support groups include people with all types of cancer. There is tremendous value in being able to share experiences with others who understand. Even when family and friends are thoroughly supportive, being with others who speak the same language can offer a different learning opportunity as well as the chance to offer help to others.

In CSCP support groups, members address ways to manage change and uncertainty while living life as fully as possible. They are committed groups that meet weekly at the same time and are facilitated by a licensed professional. Information shared is always confidential.

Research has suggested that CSC support groups empower people to:

- * Develop a new attitude towards the illness
- * Make changes in their lives that they think are important
- * Partner with their physician
- * Access resources
- * Make active choices in their recovery
